Further Afield but Worth the Treck

About 30 minutes from the venue is “The Curry Mile”, famous for having the largest concentration of Asian restaurants in the UK, including Indian, Pakistani, Sri Lankan and Bangladeshi establishments. To make the most of the trek there, visit the award-winning Manchester Museum for free, walk past the historic University of Manchester campus and its famous Old Quadrangle, and then have a quick look inside the Whitworth Art Gallery and its interesting free exhibitions. Restaurant-wise, Mughli Charcoal Pit (£) is a true institution in the area, serving delicious Indian and Pakistani street food since 1991.

If you fancy a 30-minute walk in the opposite direction, The Black Friar (££) is a beautifully restored English pub serving gourmet mains, cocktails & desserts.

Located in Manchester’s Green Quarter and 34 minutes from the venue, The Spärrrows (££) is a small neighborhood eatery serving hand-crafted European dumplings, spätzle, and pasta. Why is it worth the trek? It is one of the few restaurants in the Northwest to have received the Michelin Bib Gourmand award, recognizing great food at moderate, affordable prices.
